A data-centric society is coming in which real-world data will create various types of value. As the data-centric society advances, the demand for system infrastructure and software-development methods is expected to increase. This article introduces various technical issues and NTT R&D's efforts toward creating a future information-processing infrastructure that will support the data-centric society and respond to the evolution of society and technology.